Bell's
OH-58D Aeroscout:

On target with for the Army.

THE OH-58D AEROSCOU'T'S MAST-MOUNTED SIGHT: LOW RISK WAY TO LET THE ARMY SEE BETTER.

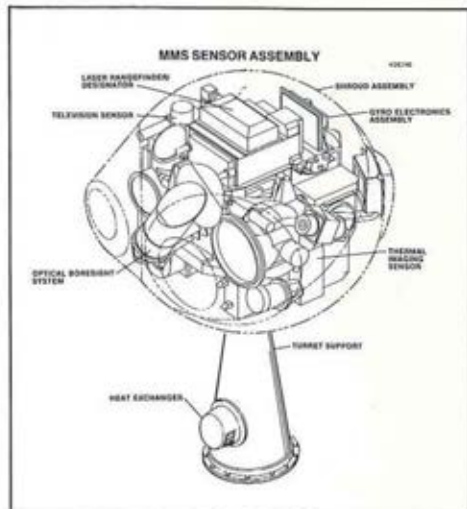

The Mast-Mounted Sight is the first major advance in mobile observation systems since hand-held binoculars were issued to the horse cavalry.

A stabilization platform proven in seven years of development holds advanced sensors; virtually eliminates vibration and jitter. Steady, sharp, magnified views of the battlefield presented on cockpit displays increase stand-off range. Fire control and distribution and target acquisition are improved.

And best of all, the sensors are mounted high above the rotor. The Bell Aeroscout and its crew are safely hidden behind tree and ridgelines, out of sight of the enemy being observed. Only the steerable, ball-shaped housing over the sensors is exposed to hostile eyes.

Our novel "soft mount" design not only lets helicopter crews take advantage of the best new precision optics and aiming systems, its protection from vibration increases system reliability and lowers maintenance costs on the sensitive instruments.

The new sight is the result of research started in 1975—we used the years since to prove that our ideas work. They do. They passed more than 300 hours of Army laboratory tests and 100 hours of Army evaluation flying. The findings built such confidence that we now are progressing toward a late summer fly date on Aeroscout on a Fixed Price Development Contract from Bell Helicopter.

The sensors chosen for the Kiowa Aeroscout permit near all-weather observation: telescopic TV for day missions and flir thermal imaging for missions previously limited by night, weather or battlefield smoke and haze conditions.

The Mast-Mounted Sight is now being readied for full-scale production as part of the Army Helicopter Improvement Program, and for other applications requiring sensor installations in high vibration environments.

CHINOOK DELTAS. GOOD NEWS FOR COMBAT COMMANDERS.

In their first six months with the 159th Aviation Battalion, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), new Chinook D models have turned in an impressive 87% availability rate. The Chinooks' versatility, plus the Delta's lift capacity and availability make it a new ball game for the combat commander.

New Night Vision Goggle (NVG) compatibility gives the Delta around-the-clock air assault support capability. For artillery movement, one Delta can carry an M-198 gun, basic ammunition load and gun crew — twice the load at faster en route speeds compared to earlier models. Also, it can airlift most of the 101st Airborne's engineering equipment without disassembly, and can carry 3,000 gallons of fuel (six blivets) for forward area resupply.

Coming up: The 1984 AAAA National Convention

By BG(P) Robert F
Molinelli,
Director of Force Requirements
and Army
Aviation Officer,
ODCSOPS,
Dept. of the Army

In reading through the feature articles in this month's magazine, particularly those on aviation operations in Grenada, I could not help but be reminded of the upcoming AAAA National Convention this March 29-April 1.

We are hoping to have Lieutenant General Jack V. Mackmull, the XVIII Airborne Corps Commander, come and talk to us more on this subject. I trust that most of you have had a chance to read after action reports on the essential role our aviation forces played in Grenada; but if you can, plan to be with us in Washington this spring anyway and hear it first hand from LTG Mackmull.

Our first astronaut

Another potential speaker at the convention will be Lieutenant Colonel Robert L. Stewart, the Army's first astronaut. Although we're still waiting to hear from NASA on his availability, we anticipate his presence at the convention. LTC Stewart is scheduled to play a central role in the ambitious space walking experiments NASA has planned for the tenth space shuttle flight in late January.

Challenger is scheduled for lift-off on 30 January for a nine-day mission. The space walks are scheduled for the fifth and seventh days when Bob and a fellow mission specialist will be the first astronauts to use the Manned Maneuvering Unit (MMU) in space. The MMU is a self-contained propulsion device and life-support system designed to allow maneuvering in space without the security of a tether. It's propelled by 24 thrusters through rotational hand controllers and a translational controller that are mounted on the arm of the MMU.

These walks will take each of them up to 300 feet away from the orbiter. If LTC Stewart is able to be with us, I know that his experiences in space will be thoroughly intriguing to all who are able to attend.

Warrant officer aviators

In this publication, Colonel Gerald E. Lethcoe has an interesting article on warrant officer aviators and their role in the aviation branch (See page 12).

Several recent letters and comments indicate there are some misunderstandings relative to the relationships of warrant officer aviators and the new aviation branch. Hopefully, Ed's article will clear up some of these misperceptions and misunderstandings.

NO. ONE—CW3 Steven R. Hagan completed the WO Senior Course, Class 83-2, as the Distinguished Graduate of the 101-member class, receiving an AAAA Plaque for the accomplishment.

CHANGEOVER—BG(P) Robert F. Molinelli will become CG, USA Readiness & Mobilization Readiness Region I, Ft. Devens, MA, in February. COL(P) Wayne N. Knudson, CofS, USA Recruiting Command, is the new Director of Force Requirements and Army Aviation Officer, ODCSOPS, DA.

We certainly want to insure that our warrant officers realize they have been and will continue to be members of the aviation team, as well as the aviation branch, regardless of final decisions on branch accoutterments and personnel management policies. Good progress is being made in resolving the few remaining issues in this area. We will keep the lines of communications open.

WHC

● On 9 December 1983, the Secretary of Defense agreed to assist the Helicopter Club of America (HCA) in fielding a U.S. Helicopter Team and sponsoring the 1984 World Helicopter Championships (WHC) in the U.S.

Fort Rucker, the home of Army Aviation, was officially designated as the site for the 1984 WHC. A steering committee of both civilian and military leaders in the aviation community has been meeting on a periodic basis to plan the WHC and resolve issues. The first order of business is to invite all Federation Aeronautique Internationale (FAI) member countries to participate in the 1984 WHC in the USA. We expect responses by the end of January. The tentative date for the WHC is October 1984.

Aviation Force Structure.

We are nearing decisions on new aviation force designs for our divisions, corps, and regiments. Current plans call for ten active and four Reserve Component combat aviation brigades for heavy divisions, six active and six Reserve Component brigades for light divisions, and one brigade for the air assault division.

Additionally, current and projected aviation systems and personnel spaces will be redistributed to form six Corps Aviation Brigades and three Regimental Combat Aviation Squadrons. You will be seeing considerably more on this subject in the months ahead as we finalize force designs and our accelerated transition plan.

This has been a joint effort between the Combined Arms Center, USAAVNC, TRADOC Headquarters, and HQDA. Many people have put a great deal of time and effort into preparing aviation for the challenges of the future, no matter what kind of battlefield on which we're committed to fight. I am confident our forces will be ready to meet those challenges. IIIII

The new Branch: An opportunity or a threat to the AWO?

By Colonel Gerald E. Lethcoe

DURING several recent trips to the field I entertained many comments by Aviation Warrant Officers (AWO's) that indicate that many misperceptions and misunderstandings exist relative to the role of the AWO and his or her relationship to the newly created Aviation Branch.

I hope this article will clear the air on these issues and update all on some recently instituted initiatives that could have favorable impacts on the AWO.

AWO's alive and well

First, let me clearly state that the AWO is not a dying breed. He's alive and well and will remain so indefinitely. There are no plans to phase out AWO positions and replace them with commissioned officers. In fact, the bulk of aviator authorizations within the Aviation Branch will be Warrants (approximately 4,500 Commissioned and 6,700 Warrants).

Secondly, there are no plans to change the current career management structure of AWO's. The Warrant Officer Division, U.S. Army Military Personnel Center, (WOD, USA-MILPERCEN) will continue to perform the career management functions for all WO's, exactly as it does today.

I am often asked by the younger AWO's: "Why am I being transferred to the Aviation Branch since I'm already a member of the "Warrant Officer Branch?"

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

A veteran Army Aviator, Colonel Gerald E. Lethcoe now serves as the Chief of the Aviation Policy Integration Division in the Office, Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Headquarters, Department of the Army.

Quite frankly, there isn't any such branch. Many young Warrants refer to the previously mentioned Warrant Officer Division of MILPERCEN as the Warrant Officer "branch". This apparently is a holdover from past years when commissioned officers were managed as a branch, i.e., aviator Infantry Captains were once managed in MILPERCEN by personnel in Infantry Branch, Combat Arms Division.

This management concept ceased when the Officer Personnel Management System was instituted and commissioned officers began to be managed by Specialty Code. Subsequently, with the formation of the Warrant Officer Division, MILPERCEN, all Warrants (with the exception of those Warrants whose MOS proponency is The Surgeon General or The Judge Advocate General) have been managed by that organization.

Branch implementation

The Secretary of the Army approved Army Aviation as a separate branch and the fifth combat arm in April, 1983. Subsequently, the Chief of Staff, Army, approved and issued the Aviation Branch Implementation Plan (ABIP). Provisions of that plan directed that all aviation personnel (commissioned, warrants, and enlisted) become members of the branch. In order to promote cohesiveness, support the regimental concept plan, enhance esprit de corps, and develop comradeship, the Aviation Branch proponent proposed the wearing of the Aviation Branch insignia by AWO's.

Since this proposal has implications for

Lean & Mean.

Turbomach power.
It gets these mean birds
airborne.

Self-sufficiency's the name of the game in military helicopters. And Turbomach's Titan auxiliary power unit provides it in spades.

Over 95% of all U.S. military helicopters large enough to require an APU have had a Turbomach Titan on board.

More than 4,000 Titans have provided reliable auxiliary power in over 5½ million hours of helicopter operation.

Titan is rugged. Dependable. Powerful. Everything the U.S. Army demands from its men and equipment, both. And Titan's tough in the battle of economics, too. Initial and operating costs are lean and trim.

Reliable Turbomach power. Helping the Blackhawk and Chinook get off the ground.

Threat or Opportunity?

the remainder of the Warrant Officer Corps, the Army Staff is processing this action, in accordance with established procedures, with the Major Commands for comment/concurrence/non-concurrence on this issue. It is anticipated that the Army Staff will resolve this issue in early 1984.

With the advent of the Aviation Branch I'm frequently queried as to whether or not the number of functional training quotas (school quotas for IP, IFE, Aviation Safety Officer, etc.) that AWO's currently receive, will be reduced.

In a nutshell, the answer to this question is, "No." The Aviation Branch considers the AWO as the long term technical expert in the aviation field and as such he or she will be appropriately trained.

Career initiatives

Colonel Bob Bunting and the personnel in Warrant Officer Division, MILPERCEN, have undertaken many initiatives to enhance the career opportunities of Warrant Officers. Some require statutory changes which will necessitate congressional approval and therefore their outcome is not entirely predictable. The point is that something is being done.

Some of Colonel Bunting's major initiatives are:

- To manage WO's by years of Warrant Officer service and not by years of active federal service. This initiative, in most cases, would give the individual the option of serving as a WO on active duty for 20 years or more, regardless of the number of previous years service he/she had when appointed as a WO.

- To readdress the W5/W6 issue. Although "super grades" for WO's have been addressed several times in the past, much emphasis is now being placed on the issue in order to provide increased career progression opportunities for Warrants.

- To commission Warrant Officers. This issue, previously disapproved, is being resurrected to permit them to perform a broader spectrum of duties.

- To hold a regular board to consider WO's requesting retention beyond 30 years active federal service. Currently Warrants desiring to serve beyond 30 years must make individual application to do so. Although program guidelines have not been specifically delineated at this time, the RA W4 promotion board could serve as the vehicle to consider eligible Warrants for retention.

- To assign graduates of the Warrant Officer Senior Course to specific duty positions to better use the knowledge acquired in the course. These duty positions have been identified and coded on personnel authorization documents. Examples are:

- .. an IFE/SIP in Headquarters, 503rd Aviation Battalion, Hanau, Germany.
- .. the Aviation Safety Officer, Headquarters, LANDSOUTHEAST, Ismir, Turkey.
- .. an Aviation Maintenance Technician, Headquarters, 4th Logistical Command, Ft. Hood, TX.

Assignment of Warrants to these positions will commence in the summer of 1984.

- To grade duty positions for WO's as junior or senior on TDAs or TOEs. Currently, these documents identify Warrant Officer positions only as "WO", thus Warrant Officers in any grade may be assigned to them. Although the current system provides maximum assignment flexibility it is deficient in aligning expertise with responsibility. Although the exact guidelines of the duty position grading have not been established this is a step in the right direction.

- To address the question of pay parity-quality. Several years ago the base pay of a W1 and O1, W2 and O2, etc, were much closer than today. Over the years the often used percentage pay raise formula has increased the difference of the two groups substantially.

In summary, the formation of the Aviation Branch should not be perceived as a threat to the career of the AWO. The AWO's role in the Branch has been considered from the beginning, not as an afterthought.

In the new Aviation Branch — a professional fraternity of all members of the fifth combat arm — the services of the Aviation Warrant Officer are essential in making our Army an "Army of Excellence".

1983: "It's been an extraordinary year."

By Lt. General John Galvin

NO matter which way you look at it, this has been an extraordinary year for Army Aviation. The branch has been created; the aviation school has been given progency for all training and doctrine; the BLACK HAWK is here and the APACHE is on the way; the Aviation Brigade is coming on as a part of DIVISION 86—all of this and much else makes 1983 a year to remember.

Much more to be done

The Aviation Employment Conference showed us that there is much left to be done. Roles and missions are shifting as we bring on new organizations and new equipment. In this period of flux, Army Aviation is looking at the possibilities inherent in the role of support and the role of maneuver on the battlefield. The gun may be coming back to challenge the missile as aviation weaponry for a wide variety of missions.

The new branch will grow to maturity in the era of the AirLand Battle, where the potential for development of aviation is broader and more varied than ever before. The question is: How to fight? There are great untapped resources and capabilities available for exploitation within our new branch.

Perhaps the most important tactical concept of all is the idea of the ground envelope. The lift, scout, and attack birds, no matter how they are configured or no matter what the mission may be, will operate in close coordination with all other Army combat arms to bring three dimensions to the battlefield — with maneuver and firepower that has never been seen in the levels that this new mix can bring.

A combat aviation management system, such as is used today in the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), is probably going to provide the example for command and control interfaces at all levels in the air-ground combination on the battlefield.

What the force packages will look like remains to be seen, and that is a very important matter: We need homogeneous organizations in which scout, lift, and attack birds are segregated into their own particular units — and then are mixed on the battlefield in packages as dictated by the tactical situation. We cannot put every kind of weapon on every helicopter — we must carefully build the proper mix. The air-to-air capability will definitely be a requirement of the immediate future.

Four challenges

What does all of this mean to the army aviator of today?

What are his responsibilities as we transition into the aviation branch, with its new doctrine, with its combined arms training, with the questions of roles and missions, of maneuver versus support — with the question of how to fight?

What is the responsibility of the individual officer, non-commissioned officer, and soldier within aviation branch as it grows to maturity under the aegis of AirLand Battle?

I see four challenges.

The first challenge is to become a team partner, fighting alongside the rest of the Army, training up the doctrine and the equipment, win-

It's time to break a military tradition.

Traditionally, you've always ordered mil spec avionics for all your aircraft.

But new mil spec avionics are expensive. And, the systems you're already operating may be obsolete as well.

Clearly, mil spec hardware may not be the most efficient way of equipping all your aircraft.

Especially those that won't even be operating in a mil spec environment.

It's time to break with the past and give these aircraft their avionics of the future.

Avionics so cost effective, the U.S. Army selected them for its U-21 and U-8 transports. And the Navy for its TH-57A helicopters.

Technically advanced avionics. In a full line, from new VHF and HF/SSB communications equipment, to a totally integrated TACAN/RNAV system.

ning the AirLand Battle through an integrated mix of combat power — in the right place at the right time on the battlefield.

I know that you have already heard many times that you must become a part of the team. Maybe there's a certain aspect of "penance" in the advice that you get that tells you — over and over again — not to put on your white scarf and fly away into the "Wild Blue Yonder."

You should be objective and recognize the fears and biases behind the endless repetition of the idea that you are somehow going to be lost — and with the comment, "Wild Blue Yonder," I mean no disparagement to the United States Air Force. History shows us that there was a requirement for a strategic Air Force, as well as for tactical flying. It was necessary for the Army Air Corps to become an Air Force in order to be able to operate in the strategic realm as a partner to the other Armed Forces; but you know that you are tactical — you will be operating in the ground envelope as a part of the Army.

You must overcome the worries and anxieties of some of the United States Army by showing — over and over again — your absolute dedication to the ground fight. As an aviator your first source of pride must be the recognition that you are, above all, a soldier.

The second challenge is the danger of parochialism which might inhibit the development of training and doctrine along lines that can be most productive to the Army ground battle. As the experience of the other branches — which you now have in abundance — begins to disappear over the years, you must replace this at Fort Rucker, and in the field, with a deep professional knowledge and understanding of what goes on in the Infantry, Armor, Artillery, and other elements of the ground fighting machine.

The third major challenge is the problem of people in the aviation branch. As we look at the personnel aspects of the drastic changes which must come about in the creation of a new branch, we should recognize that careers are on the line — careers of officers, non-commissioned officers, and young soldiers. The immediate answer to the problem of career development is, of course, to get on with the organization of Division 86, but that is only the first step. As the kaleidoscope of personnel actions revolves around the birth of the branch we must do everything possible to recognize the people aspects of the organizational and doctrinal changes that are sure to come about.

Everyone of you must ensure, from top to bottom of the organization, that the following words are true: Aviation Branch takes care of its own.

The fourth and last of the challenges has to do with tradition. Never forget that the fighting will of the Aviation Officer and Soldier will always be more important than anything else. It is based on many things, of course; on love of country, on pride in unit, on a personal sense of responsibility. Perhaps even more than these, it is based on a deep feeling of cohesion among those who wear the aviation insignia.

As it should be

In the future, you will see devotion, dedication, and indeed love for the branch. The wings and propeller will come to mean more and more to you as time goes by, enveloping great chunks of your life and experience. And this is as it should be. That insignia means you have become an equal member of the fighting team, an expert, a professional in every sense of the word, an Army Aviator in a way that has new meaning to all of us.

Army Aviation is embarked on a profoundly significant endeavor, reaching into hitherto untouched possibilities in combined arms warfare. The potential is unlimited, but the future is unknown. It all depends on you.

I can only wish you the best of luck — and Godspeed.

URGENT FURY
ARMY AVIATION IN GRENADA

On October 24, the "call out" for combat action at 2100 hours on the tiny Caribbean island of Grenada was, for troopers of the world's only airborne aviation battalion — the 82nd Combat Aviation Battalion, 82nd Airborne Division — the opportunity for them to prove that Army Aviation is a valuable component in today's strategic, quick reaction force and a full member of the combined arms team.

Hostilities on the island began on October 25 when U.S. forces, along with Caribbean Allies, committed over 2,000 troops in a successful pre-dawn raid to rescue nearly 1,000 American citizens whose lives were endangered by a Marxist-dominated, Cuban-backed government which had seized power about a week earlier in a bloody and brutal military coup. Most of the American citizens were medical students enrolled at the University of St. George's Medical School.

Bloody Sunday

Detailed planning for Operation URGENT FURY, as the Grenada rescue mission was entitled, began sometime during the week of 17 October 83, but, because of the extremely close security requirements surrounding the planning, the Aviation Battalion was not brought into the effort until Sunday, 23 October, the same day a terrorist bomb killed 240 Marines in Beirut.

As late as 1700 on Sunday, the plan was to self-deploy one company of UH-60A BLACK HAWKS to Grenada. Maps of the routes into the area were not readily available, so all planning had to be done at the Corps Headquarters.

All that day MAJ William J. Elder and MAJ Elton S. Sledge, Jr. — BLACK HAWK Company Commanders — consulted with the Battalion S-3, MAJ Lonnie E. Weck, and the S-4, CPT Jimmy M. Rabon, on the operational and logistical considerations of the shortest over-water routes and JP4 availability at pre-designated stops.

It was determined that the self-deployment would require eight refuel stops and nearly two days to complete. Consequently, late Sunday evening, this option was dropped and planning was then initiated for C-5A deployment into an intermediate staging base (ISB) at Barbados, an island 130 ocean-miles east of Grenada. Tight security concerning the operation dictated that no BLACK HAWKS be prepared for C-5A loading until the operation was underway.

On Monday morning, 24 October, the 82nd Combat Aviation Battalion awoke to a business-as-usual day; PT at 0630, followed by breakfast and training of the day at 0900. The Battalion was continuing its recovery from an Army Training Evaluation Program (ARTEP) and simultaneous Emergency Deployment Readiness Exercise (EDRE) the previous week, and only five Battalion planners knew about Grenada.

Training was concluded at 1730 for the 1,028 paratroopers, mechanics and pilots of the unit, while the planning cell continued until 2000. At 2100 the alert was called and the Battalion's alert notification was initiated.

Training pays off

All the years of alert notification practices and EDRE call-outs paid off. Things really began to happen: troops reported in with bags packed; MAJ Elder's Company B was tabbed for early deployment; teams reported to the ASP for ammo; leaders began to check rosters and pre-deployment checklists; the S-4 obtained contingency stocks and prepared to issue special equipment of poncho liners, 2 quart canteens, and extra magazines for the M-16's; and the troopers began to sense that this one was for real.

An alert is not just a normal exercise and even the practice alerts create an appreciable adrenalin flow — but as the troops realized this was no practice, adrenalin was pumping. They didn't know where they were headed, and that small unknown fact merely served to heighten their excitement.

At the 2300 Division briefing, the G-2 confirmed that light resistance was expected in Gren-

When the fighting starts, the fog of battle can blind a commander.

But the small Army/Lockheed Aquila RPV will give decision makers a clear, bird's-eye view of the action, along with a range of options. All for a fraction of the cost of a high-performance aircraft and its irreplaceable crew.

Aquila provides precise targeting it returns to its retrieval net for safe recovery.

With a 13-foot wingspan and 110-mph speed, Aquila can beeline, loiter, and jink to avoid enemy fire. Infrared-seeking weapons can't recognize it. And it stays aloft for sorties up to three hours long. In tests at the Army proving grounds, Aquila demonstrated its survivability by successfully evading a deadly mix of fire.

When it becomes operational, Aquila will be an affordable answer to a number of vital missions, all helping to give a battle commander a better feel for the battle.

ada and that a coordinated Ranger/Marine assault would precede the Division's 2nd Brigade onto the island.

One company of BLACK HAWKS was requested for the Brigade's mobility, but COBRA support was specifically excluded from the airflow because the threat at that time did not warrant it.

The initial Division plan called for the Brigade to airland by C-141 at Grenada, or to airland at Barbados, download into C-130s and prepare to parachute assault or airland at Grenada, depending on the enemy situation and the condition of the runway at Point Salines.

The Division's Support Command, DISCOM, was tasked to plan and organize operations at Barbados, the ISB, and then re-establish operations at Grenada when practical, while all the aviation assets were scheduled to deploy by C-5A only to the ISB. Too many unknowns existed at Grenada to plan an airflow only into Point Salines.

As the Division Aviation Officer, I chose to accompany the Division Assault CP into Grenada to assess the aviation requirements for follow-on deployment and to help prepare the way for Company B's arrival.

Preparing to move

Deployment outloading continued. Airborne qualified pilots were dispatched to the brigades to act as aviation liaison officers to the infantry, thus revalidating the requirement for leaders in the 82nd Combat Aviation Battalion to maintain their airborne proficiency.

Maps were issued — a re-printed tourist map of Grenada with a military grid overlay — and for the first time, most troops discovered where they were headed. Telephone service was disrupted to maintain the tight security; rear detachment Commanders were designated; and alert notification letters were reprinted with updated names and phone numbers for family members to contact while the Battalion was deployed.

The importance of rear detachment planning cannot be overemphasized. Without a predetermined plan of action and an organized packet of information prepared in advance, the rear detachment would have been swamped with frantic family members and associated problems, thus reducing their vital role of pushing supplies and support forward to the deployed units. In this case, the Battalion XO, MAJ George S. Eyster, IV, and the S-1, CPT Ronald A. Putnam, worked the rear detachment plan to perfection.

Action begins

During the early morning of Tuesday, 25 October, shortly after the Ranger parachute assault began, communications were established between U.S. Forces on Grenada and the Division. It was obvious that resistance was much stiffer than expected. The Division decided to issue parachutes to the 2nd Brigade and assault CP troops in case an immediate parachute assault was required in Grenada.

As it turned out, the Division was able to airland its C-141s at Point Salines on an unfinished, hard surface 9,000 foot runway. However, ramp space was available for only one C-130 and all C-141s had to offload on the east end of the active runway. Important to the Aviation Battalion was the fact that DISCOM had by-passed Barbados and deployed directly to Grenada.

By the time I arrived at Point Salines and made my way to the Division CP, additional elements of the Aviation Battalion had been alerted for deployment. "Alpha" Company BLACK HAWKS under MAJ Elton Sledge, "Delta" Company's fully modernized COBRAs under CPT Bernardo C. Negrete, a "Charlie" Company C&C section under CW2 George R. Morrison, a "Foxtrot" Company forward support platoon under CPT Leonard J. "Bud" Rodowick and a headquarters operations, supply and pathfinder element were all preparing for deployment.

By the time the Battalion's deployment was completed, there were nearly 600 personnel and 45 aircraft deployed in the vicinity of the unfinished airfield.

An immediate need

The early ground fighting indicated an immediate need for the Division's helicopter capability, so I grabbed a ride to Barbados to see what could be done to assist the Company B off-load and rebuild. I arrived in Barbados in time to find Company B off-loading their first C-5A in an area of the airfield that was a virtual labyrinth of confusion. BLACK HAWKS folded for loading and their deployment kits and parts were interspersed with C-130s all over the ramp, and about every 30 minutes someone would run up to a worn-out crew chief who was attempting to reinstall his tail stabilator and tell him that all the BLACK HAWKS had to move so a C-130 could get out for Grenada.

It was obvious that the DISCOM support already in Grenada would have been a valuable asset in Barbados. As it was, CPT Jimmy Rabon, the Battalion S-4, was summarily appointed CINC Barbados for the purpose of off-loading C-5As and pushing troops, support vehicles and aircraft to Grenada.

Eventually, the Battalion's aircraft and ground support vehicles all deployed through the ISB to Grenada on their own and then re-deployed back through Barbados on their return to Fort Bragg. The companies' air movements officers and NCO's put all of their training to use on this exercise and they conducted the movements without significant problems.

The last leg

It took Company B until just prior to dusk to reassemble their aircraft and make preparations for their flight into Grenada. By this time, all the pilots and crews were exhausted from the three non-stop days of deploying into combat and the decision was made to catch six hours of rest. With a few minutes to think to themselves, the crews discussed how ironic it was that only five days before they had been cursing the conclusion of their ARTEP because they never got to fly anywhere other than Fort Bragg.

By 0300 on Thursday, 27 October, they were on their way into Grenada. On arrival, they learned that JP4 had not yet been delivered to Point Salines, even though LT Eric Katz's POL platoon from DISCOM had been set up to receive it for two days. Without waiting, the company initiated their own over-the-beach hot refuel point by transporting 500-gallon bladders off-shore to the USS Guam for refuel and return to Point Salines.

Calivigny Point assault

By early that afternoon, Company B received word to report to Division HQ where MAJ Bill Elder was briefed by MG Edward L. Trobaugh, the Division CG, that the 1/75th Rangers were to conduct a combat assault into Calivigny Point Military Barracks as soon as (URGENT FURY Continued on Page 57)

Looking back at URGENT FURY

they could be ready to move using Company B's BLACK HAWKS. Elder studied the available aerial photographs, helped plan the assault with the Ranger commander, and departed quickly to prepare his crews.

The only landing zones available were inside the barracks compound where a great deal of blow-down debris and some fires were expected from the artillery and Navy air prep. Within 30 to 40 minutes following the initial briefing, aircraft were in the air conducting the assault. Planning involved flights of four BLACK HAWKS each into the area with three turnarounds to bring the entire Ranger Battalion onto the objective.

Chalk 1 and 2 got in all right, but Chalk 3 got hit about six feet off the ground and spun into Chalk 2. Chalk 4, following closely, had to dive right to avoid the flying debris and crashed into the center of the compound.

The second flight of four had more time to avoid the downed aircraft and landed into the southern end of the camp. The Rangers rapidly secured the compound and held it through the night. The following day, Friday, 28 October, the helicopters were recovered and the Rangers extracted.

An important capture

In another significant action involving elements of the Aviation Battalion, CPT Francis B. "Brett" Kaufman, Company B Platoon Leader, planned a troop insertion with LTC Keith M. Nightingale, Commander, 2/505th Airborne Infantry, that resulted in the capture of Grenadian General Hudson Austin, head of the short-lived government that came into power after the assassination of Prime Minister Maurice Bishop.

During this operation, COL James T. "Terry" Scott, 3rd Brigade Commander, reported that the UH-1 C&C aircraft played a vital role in Austin's capture as it hovered around the house where he and several bodyguards had taken refuge, peering into windows and creating a presence that Scott believes was sufficient influence to cause him to surrender rather than to fight his way out.

BOTTOM RIGHT: AN 82ND AIRBORNE TROOPER INSPECTS SOME OF THE WEAPONS CAPTURED IN GRENADA.

Hindsight shows, of course, that COBRAs should have been deployed with the initial BLACK HAWKS. The emergence of the attack helicopter's primary role as a tank killer on the modern battlefield has tended to relegate the COBRA's escort role to a secondary position.

However, as contingency missions will continue to prove, there remains a valuable role for attack helicopters protecting troop carrying helicopters in combat assaults. Unfortunately, by the time the COBRAs arrived in Grenada, the fighting was over.

Lessons learned

The Battalion did, however, learn several valuable lessons about aircraft performance in a hot climate: the fully modernized COBRA can carry more armament with a full fuel load than was previously thought; the UH-1 C&C console aircraft revalidated its vital role; and the BLACK HAWK clearly established its workhorse role on the battlefield with both troop insertions and the establishment of its own hot refuel operations. None of the aircraft experienced any significant maintenance problem in the austere, dust-clogged environment of Point Salines airfield.

For the 500 troopers of the Battalion who returned home by 21 November, it was obvious that the Army's only airborne aviation battalion had proven its value in the quick reaction force during Operation URGENT FURY.

Helicopters, teamed with the airborne infantry trooper to give him range and speed to extend his combat power; moved him quickly and efficiently from one location to another; took him into battle; supplied his combat needs; evacuated him to medical facilities when necessary and extracted him once his job was done.

There is little doubt that Army Aviation is a vital force in the combined arms team. IIII

"Dustoff" in Grenada

By Major Arthur W. Hapner

FORT Bragg's 57th Medical Detachment (RG) has the daily mission of readiness ing. Basic aviator skills, medical tasks, and maintenance highlight our routine day-in and day-out preparation for the vital wartime mission of medical evacuation.

The unit utilizes its normal support mission of aeromedical evacuation at the Fort Bragg ranges and at Womack Army Hospital, and in the Military Assistance to Safety and Transportation (MAST) program for the State of North Carolina, the latter providing a substantial amount of real world atmosphere to this training.

In addition, the unit is deployed periodically with other units, aviation and non-aviation, to train and provide aeromedical evacuation support.

Early training pays off!

One such exercise was Bright Star '83, wherein the 57th prepared for self-deployment to the exercise area. In doing so, the pilots and crewmembers were subjected to additional training, such as egress and water survival training, carrier landing training, overwater hoist training, and high altitude training. Due to unforeseen circumstances, the 57th did not self-deploy, but was transported by C-5A. All this essential training would soon prove to be the missing link to success.

At 0100 on 25 October 1983 the 57th Medical Detachment was alerted to prepare for deployment. The men and women reacted professionally and had the unit ready to go by 0500. Rumors of the final destination spread throughout the unit . . . Lebanon was uppermost in most people's minds. The various sections had prepared well, but at the last moment the unit had to adjust for only three aircraft and minimal crews were to deploy.

These resources were moved to Pope AFB at Fort Bragg where they linked up with "B" Company of the 82nd Combat Aviation Battalion

(CAB) for deployment by C-5A. Everything up to this point had gone very smoothly, due largely to the training the unit had just completed in Bright Star '83. The aircraft were prepared by folding the main rotors and the tail rotor blades and pulling the stabilators.

Destination: Barbados!

Through a team effort of the 57th and 82nd CAB personnel, the pre-airlift tasks were accomplished efficiently and quickly. Early on the morning of 26 October the equipment and personnel were loaded on the C-5 Galaxy. Destination: Barbados. Upon arriving on the Isle of Barbados, the unit deplaned and prepared the aircraft for the flight to Grenada.

A pre-dawn flight was planned on the morning of the next day, the 27th of October. At that time the units departed the staging area at Barbados and flew in three waves of seven aircraft each. Two of the 57th Medical Detachment aircraft accompanied the 82nd CAB on the first wave and one was in the second wave.

The pre-dawn flight marked the first time a number of the medical evacuation pilots had flown formation in many years. Normally, the aeromedical evacuation mission is performed as a single ship extraction. The low level insertion was undertaken without incident. The 57th Medical Detachment crews arrived at Point Salines at 0615 and were ready to conduct their first medical evacuation mission at 0715.

"Dustoff"

At 1215 on the 27th, the first "Dustoff" mission was called with the first up crew, consisting of two pilots, a crewchief and a medic. The UH-60A BLACK HAWK departed and within two minutes was on site for the extraction — in this instance, a wounded Marine in need of immediate medical attention. The Marine was loaded onto the helicopter and shortly thereafter was under the care of a physician at "C" Company, 307th Medical Battalion. Later that afternoon, the patient - now stabilized - was transported to the USS Guam. This was the start of three days of constant readiness and response to the call for "Dustoff".

Regarding actual operations, the "Dustoff" crews departed Port Salines at 100 feet AGL and flew to the south or north depending on the location of the pickup sites along the coast of Grenada. The BLACK HAWKS would fly about one to two miles offshore to a point perpendicular to the pickup site, and then proceed directly inland to the pickup site utilizing NOE techniques.

Due to communication problems, one of the 57th's aircraft was field-sited at Pearls Airfield to support the northern half of the island, thereby minimizing the time spent reacting to the calls for medical evacuation. This unit performed expertly and efficiently, extracting 43 wounded soldiers, marines, civilians, and POW's, during 38 missions and flying 30.7 hours over a five day period.

MAST on Grenada

The 57th Medical Detachment was not able to completely turn away from the MAST-type support mission even in this combat environment. One evening, a call came in to evacuate a young Grenadian woman who was in the advance stages of labor and having difficulty. The mission was on a small island north of Grenada.

The crew launched from Pearls Airfield since they were closer. But it had to turn back due to weather on the eastern side of the island. Fortunately, the response aircraft from Point Salines was flying along the northwestern side of the island and heard the other aircraft turning back. The second aircraft proceeded up the western side and were able to make the pickup. The patient was expeditiously flown back to Point Salines and the 5th MASH Hospital, where the delivery of the baby was completed by surgical means.

"Dustoff" in Grenada

Besides the normal field extractions, the unit provided support to the medical clearing company and transported wounded to the USS Guam and back to Point Salines for movement via C-130 or C-141 to Fort Bragg. Also, there were a number of hoist missions that were significant, a total of 14 lives being saved when the 57th pulled the men out of the water.

On the first mission, three soldiers who were swimming in the surf at dusk, were caught by the turbulent waters and were washed along a rocky coast, unable to reach secure land due to the cliffs. The "Dustoff" crew was alerted and within ten minutes were over the stranded swimmers. Due to the position of the hoist in the right rear section of the aircraft, the pilot had to turn the aircraft so that it was in a 14-18 knot tail wind hover. This positioning afforded the hoist operator the best vantage point to direct the hoisting operation.

With only the searchlight as a means of lighting, the crewchief directed the pilot and kept the aircraft over the location. The aircraft was at 150 feet AGL; there was little reference to maintain stability with the pilot was looking out to sea. By cross reference between the heading indicator and radar altimeter and with directions he received from the crewchief, the pilot was able to maintain stability. The medic was lowered on the hoist cable to the surf where he secured the first swimmer in the harness. Both were then hoisted into the aircraft with this process being repeated for the second swimmer.

However, the third lift wasn't that simple. The last individual was located on a small rock ledge under the cliff. The medic again descended on the cable and on reaching a point adjacent to the stranded individual, yelled for him to jump and swim to the cable. Unfortunately, he could not swim and would not leave the ledge. With the medic in a position opposite the swimmer, the pilot rocked the aircraft left and right. At the same time the crewchief helped to swing the cable and soon the medic began to swing under the cliff. On one swing the medic reached out and pulled the individual off the ledge whereupon both were hoisted to safety.

Eight days later, a similar hoist mission was rescued six Grenadian fishermen whose boat had capsized in the ocean. Like the first mission, the hoist and rescue crew successfully saved the lives of the stranded individuals.

Other hoist missions were performed over wooded and mountainous terrain with the techniques utilized being similar to those employed in Vietnam. One thing is certain: The UH-60 BLACK HAWK, with the hoist installed, provides a very stable platform to perform this life saving mission.

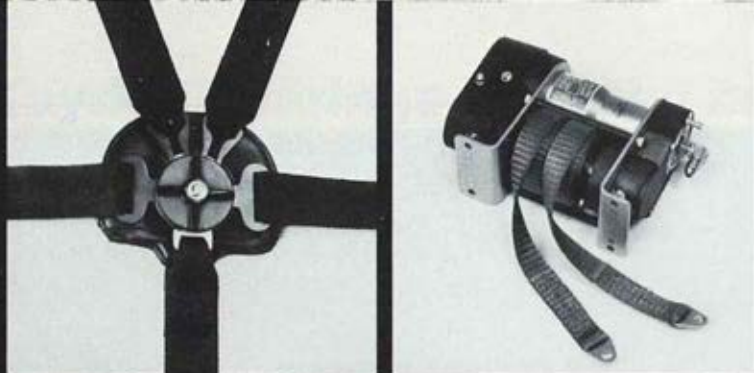

Training and practice saved lives

The medical evacuation mission in Grenada was an unqualified success. The soldiers of the 57th Medical Detachment were prepared to perform this vital life/limb saving mission because the readiness training and exercises in which they participated over the past year provided them with the necessary skills. Earlier carrier qualification with the USS Independence familiarized the crews with Navy procedures, which allowed for ease in landing during URGENT FURY on the USS Guam.

Overwater hoist training in preparation for the self-deployment to Bright Star '83 proved to be meaningful in the extraction of 14 individuals from the sea. C-5A loadout preparation and training enabled the crews to breakdown and reassemble the aircraft to meet the critical timetable for the deployment to Grenada.

Finally, the daily support mission for Fort Bragg and its MAST mission for the State of North Carolina kept the crews attuned to the urgency of the mission . . . and both missions sharpened the medics' skills in reacting instantaneously. The NOE, contact, night training, and post mission support allowed the pilots to fly the mission with ease and confidence.

In the combat support arena of Grenada "Dustoff" aeromedical evacuation not only saved lives but, as it's done so often in the past, the mission again bolstered the morale of all of the fighting men who took part in URGENT FURY.

Canadian CMA-730 Opto Vertical Scale

The CMA-730 uses a unique display technique which affords significant space saving and human engineering advantages over conventional instruments. The system combines proven fiberoptic display and solid state electronic signal processing techniques. Moving parts are completely eliminated. Colour coded vertical scales and digital readouts are bright, clear and accurate, with no parallax errors even when viewed from wide angles. The entire system is simple, rugged, reliable, easily maintained and incorporates a high degree of inherent redundancy.

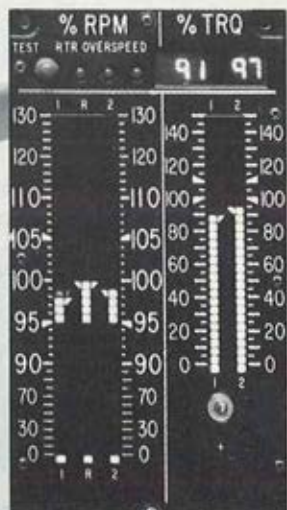

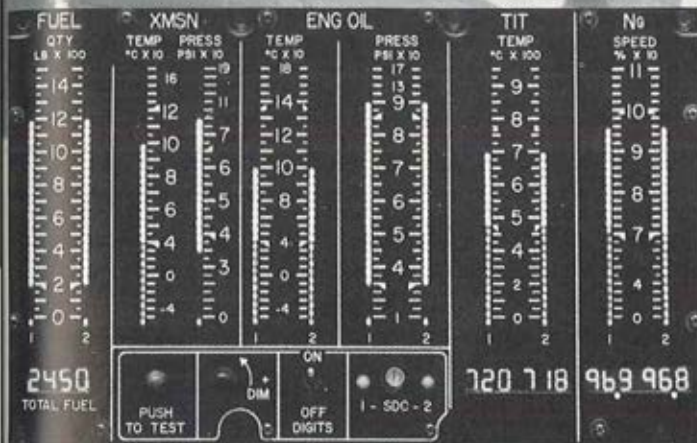

The CMA-730 series is available as discrete instruments as well as integrated display panels. Full information on request.

Are medical waivers being denied? . . . Yes and no.

THERE is a saying about rumors which goes something like this, "Pick the one you like best and stick with it. If there are none you like, make up your own and get it going." It appears that someone didn't like what he heard and got a rumor going that says all medical waivers are being denied.

This rumor has caused havoc in the aviation community. The number of aviators going on sick call has dropped dramatically as aviators either go without medical attention, self-medicate, or go to civilian physicians who are not trained in aerospace medicine.

Maintaining Class II standards

Let's set the record straight.

Each of us recognizes that to get accepted into aviation, we had to pass a rigorous physical exam. The physical requirements were necessary to ensure that the Army had personnel who were physically capable of performing demanding flight duties in the safest possible manner in all contingencies.

Once in aviation training and continuing throughout an officer's military aviation career, medical requirements are relaxed to a Class II flight physical standard. Each of us, as we entered the aviation program, understood that our continuance in the program depended at least in part on our ability to maintain the Class II standard.

The Army understands the fact that during the normal aging process the body deteriorates and some aviators will no longer be capable of flight duties; however, other will remain completely qualified.

The granting of waivers

It is further recognized that some disqualifying physical deficiencies will not seriously degrade the aviation mission nor aviation safety. Officers who have relatively minor physical maladies will be continued in aviation service when there are insufficient medically qualified aviators to satisfy requirements.

To regulate this process, the Army established a policy by which waivers may be granted for medically disqualifying conditions when recommended by the Army Aeromedical Center and when necessary to meet Army requirements. Once granted, waivers allow an aviator to remain in aviation service only as long as the Army's requirement exists.

Two separate actions gave rise to the rumors. To understand the two actions we must first separate the classes of waivers.

First is the routine waiver request and second is the existing waiver. Due to the need to validate an Army requirement prior to granting a waiver, a close scrutiny of all waiver requests took place. To comply with existing regulations, a review of each requestor's file was conducted in an attempt to identify specific requisite qualifications (IP, IFE, etc.).

Failure to find such qualifications grounded 13 aviators from mid-February to mid-May 1983. Despite following Army policy, this action sent the wrong signal to the field. Some aviators sensed that a visit to the flight surgeon meant laying one's aviation career on the line.

This had obvious safety implications. So the course was reversed in late May 1983 with resumption of the liberal waiver granting posture. There was never any intention to deny routine medical waiver requests as a strength management tool.

waivers, was caused by budget considerations. We are experiencing a higher retention rate in the warrant force than was anticipated. This is due, at least in part, to the depressed economy. With the aviation force overaligned, the Army cannot access technical service warrant officers in critically short MOSs.

This meant that to correct the situation the Army had to bring the aviation warrant officer force into alignment. With aviation warrants in excess of Army requirements and many warrants with medical waivers in effect, the Army was in an untenable position.

A thorough review

We began a thorough review of all medical waivers to determine, in view of requirements, which waivers should be continued.

The methodology was to identify those individuals who most severely limited the readiness and deployability of the Army during a national emergency and then vacate those waivers.

It was the collective opinion of the leadership in the Army's medical, personnel, and aviation community that aviators who are restricted to flight with a co-pilot are the most severely limiting population and that their waivers should be vacated. This action resulted in the vacation of some 20 waivers. No other categories of waivers have been identified and no further action is anticipated which would further curtail medical waivers.

Now that the air is clear, pass the word. Let's stop the rumors and get medical attention when required from your flight surgeon. (He's the one that was the most vocal and initiated action to reverse the action of denying of routine waivers).
